These processes are altered in mental illnesses. We propose to examine in detail the molecular mechanisms of a family of metalloproteases known as the Matrix Metalloprotease (MMP) family, whose function is likely to be regulated by neurotransmitter and neurotrophic factors. Our research is focused on the regulation and function of MMPs by neurotrophic factors: NGF, BDNF, GDNF, NT-3. We have established collaborations with clinicians to focus on two disorders of the nervous system that show deficits in the responsiveness to these neurotrophic factors and that are potential candidates for therapeutic intervention: hypomyelination and loss of dopaminergic innervation in Parkinson's disease and striatal necrosis in Huntington's disease. We will use cultured cells as well as models of these diseases in vivo, to test the hypothesis that NGF, BDNF, and GDNF may protect neurons from the degener
